

North Korean cloud AI server

We've detected North Korean IT workers conducting a global ...

Thousands of North Korean IT workers are using stolen and made-up US identities to make hundreds of millions of dollars a year to fund Pyongyang's military programs.

Sanctions-hit North Korea could be using cloud computing to train artificial intelligence systems for its military, a study has warned. The Stimson Center think tank published an analysis on ...

Sanctions-hit North Korea could be using cloud computing to train artificial intelligence systems for its military, a study has warned. The Stimson ...

Our green, hyperscale datacenters with AI, cloud, and robotics provide a solid foundation for AI businesses. Hyperscale AI gives NAVER Cloud a competitive edge over other platforms as it moves ...

SEJONG -- Naver Cloud showcased its hyperscale data center GAK Sejong, expressing its confidence and efficiency in designing and operating data centers, the most important ...

Since 2024, Microsoft Threat Intelligence has observed remote information technology (IT) workers deployed by North Korea leveraging AI to improve the scale and sophistication of their ...

We've detected North Korean IT workers conducting a global expansion beyond the U.S., with a notable focus on Europe. They have also intensified extortion campaigns against employers, ...

Some argue that North Korea could conduct machine learning by accessing cloud services instead of operating its own data centres.

North Korea is investing in its AI capacity, and a think tank has called on cloud computing service providers to do more to ensure the hermit kingdom can't rent the infrastructure it needs to ...

To effectively address the potential sanctions and proliferation risks posed by North Korea's AI/ML endeavors, national authorities should proactively engage with cloud computing ...

Kim adds that as North Korea can't access the hardware needed for advanced artificial intelligence research, it could turn to cloud computing services, such as Google Colab, Microsoft...

Thousands of North Korean IT workers are using stolen and made-up US identities to make hundreds of millions of dollars a year to fund Pyongyang's ...

North Korean cloud AI server

Web: <https://maxtools.co.za>

